

iway takes over Swissmail.org

Expansion of secure e-mail communication

The Internet service provider iway will be taking over the e-mail service Swissmail.org as of 1 July 2011. The e-mail hosting service founded by Frank Purmann is aimed at private individuals and companies with increased security needs. Thus Swissmail.org users can automatically and effortlessly exchange encrypted e-mails.

Thanks to the takeover by iway, Swissmail.org will benefit from the strength of an established ISP which has enjoyed years of success, as well as from its personnel resources, its broad-based engineering expertise, and an established support organisation. These are all factors which, according to Swissmail.org CEO Frank Purmann, are crucial for the future development and success of Swissmail.org.

The e-mail hosting services offered by Swissmail.org will complement iway's existing service portfolio, iway being an Internet service provider which is geared to the needs of SMEs. This includes Internet access solutions and networking, hosting services (from websites to managed virtual servers and applications), server housing, colocation services and e-mail and communication services such as Hosted Exchange. The Zurich-based company operates its own highly secure data centre in Switzerland, is completely owned by management, and currently employs around 15 people.

Matthias Oswald, the founder and CEO of iway emphasises: «Our outstanding data centre infrastructure and our many years of experience in operating secure applications offers Swissmail.org important competitive advantages from which both existing and new clients will permanently benefit.»
